Press Release

The Arts Council funded project 'The Story So Far' is creating an 'arts & story trail' from one end of Ealing to the other. The library anchors have been linked via a range of engaging activities, commissions and exhibits in literary and visual arts. The aim is to increase library and cultural activity engagement through the themes of sharing core stories and giving life to books. It initiates the first partnership between the Council, libraries, Cultural Community Solutions, Acton Arts Forum, the local arts sector and artists.

The current exhibition entitled 'The Story So Far', curated by Tanya Loi at Acton's W3 Gallery, explores the overarching themes of giving life to books by using different art forms, interpreting story themes and sharing stories across communities. The project is fostering greater engagement of arts and culture through the high-profile programme of activities and exhibits of visual and literary arts. It is developing the arts in Ealing by fostering partnerships between artists, arts organisations and libraries. We are supporting opportunities for artists to create and share new work, and widening audiences for the arts in Ealing through new venues and contexts.

Artistic expression interpreting the literary themes includes artwork on themes rooted in stories, myths, folklore and other literary inspiration. The artwork has been created in media ranging through painting, performance, video, audio, text, photography, sculpture, drawing and more. There are 27 exhibiting artists.
